So what are Cookies exactly? Simply put, they're tiny files automatically downloaded to any device you use, computer, tablet, mobile or more, whenever you go to a website. They're designed to make your visit quicker, easier and better.

Strictly Necessary Cookies

When we say strictly necessary, we mean it. These helpful little cookies make sure our website works properly, and only ever run for the duration of your visit. They remember the information you've already entered, on order forms for example, as you move between different pages.

- They allow us to set up secure areas on the website.
- They know whether or not you've closed the Cookie notification.

Performance Cookies

Like many other websites, we collect information about how people are using our site with the help of Cookies. That way, we can improve our website to help give visitors the things they're looking for.

Using this anonymous information gives us a real insight into how we're doing and what we need to do to make our online service better than ever.

- They help us to improve and enhance our website.
- They help us pick up any errors that may have happened, so we can stop them from happening again.
- They help us test designs for our website, and keep a consistent user-friendly look.

Functionality Cookies

These Cookies help us to make our content as tailored to you as possible. They do this by allowing the website to remember any information you've entered, like your username or your home station for instance.
